Why Symphony

The garage door industry has changed a lot since Artisan helped launch the movement toward real wood, hand-made, carriage-style doors. While owners of signature architectural properties paid handsomely for that Old World craftsmanship and authenticity, the rest of the market sought a way to capture the look and feel of real wood but with low maintenance materials and mass production methods. Enter technical innovations like CNC routing machines that could quickly carve a design onto a flat piece of vinyl or printing wood grain patterns on a thin piece of steel.

In recent years, the market has been overrun with commodity carriage house doors that are cookie-cutter substitutes for the real deal. With one important exception of course — Artisan's hand-made Symphony series, which is a New World unto itself. No one does details like Artisan.

While an architecturally rich appearance is the main reason homeowners gravitate to Symphony, the added appeal is a low maintenance and durable design. That extends from an optional easy-care finish to outstanding impact resistance and dimensional stability, to an overall package that has made Symphony the first door series in the Artisan family to receive a 25-year warranty. That's lasting value that represents a whole new world in garage door aesthetics, care, and longevity.
